I have not tested this link but got this from other forum. hope this helps :) Q: Origin of "Sink of Invisibility" I recently came across the phrase: "the Sink of Invisibility" and wondered where it originates from. The phrase is mentioned in The Negro Prisoners of 1929 (by Marie Bell) and appears to have entered the popular consciousness by way of Harlem Renaissance writers in the 1920s. Here are a few examples: "His [Bert Williams's] most delightful talent is for exaggeration, as though he were writing to a particular style and manner; he speaks the Negro tongue of Harlem as easily as the American of New York", wrote Stephen Vincent Benét in the summer of 1925. "I have never known a reader like Professor March, a spellbinding, story-teller, and Bert is just as good. He has a rich, dry, feline voice, and you don't hear much dialogue in his tales. Hark! Listen to him. Here he is: Listen! Listen as the Sink of Invisibility would. Here he tells of the Big Man's Daughter who made a Tangle at the Sunrise Wedding. Listen!" "The Voice of Harlem's New Poet" The New York Times, July 23, 1929 The whole passage is worth reading. I suspect the phrase has its origins in the language of the street, although it's been 3da54e8ca3
