Description: Bartender Print Console allows you to browse and preview multiple versions of your Bartender files with all the necessary information about your projects. The application enables you to search and find the desired version of the project you're looking for. Features: • Preview selected files • Search for a specific project • Choose the latest version of the project you're looking for • Re-ordering project versions • Remove a selected project version of the DCM as functions of the gridpoint index S_i . On the left we show the prediction of the DCM at the starting point of the simulation; on the right we plot the DCM after a 2 ns simulation run. The DCM is computed as the normalized dipole correlation function, i.e. $\rho_{ij} = \frac{\vec{d}_i \cdot \vec{d}_j}{|\vec{d}_i| |\vec{d}_j|}$.  Fig.  shows an example of a simulation with the DCM. On the left is shown the diffusion coefficient at the beginning of the simulation. In the right, we show the diffusion coefficient at the end of the simulation. We note that the absolute diffusion coefficient is calculated and that the diffusion coefficients show an excellent agreement with our predictions. Conclusions ===== We have presented a model for the subunit dynamics that is based on the molecular dynamics of the entire tetramer. This model is in agreement with a large number of experimental data on this system. We predict the average diffusion coefficient of the peptide and we also obtain the diffusion coefficient of the individual subunits. Our predictions agree extremely well with the average diffusion coefficient obtained from FCS measurements. We conclude that our model for the subunit dynamics is able to describe the whole dynamics of the tetramer of B-DNA forming peptides. We also note that the agreement of the diffusion coefficient of the subunits with the prediction of our model is better than that in the case of all-atom simulations [Fischer01].
