mp4 english hindi enNeuroprotection in animal models of stroke. Accumulating evidence suggests that much of the pathophysiological process of stroke is mediated by excitotoxicity, i.e., excessive activation of N-methyl-D-aspartate (NMDA) receptors by glutamate released from damaged neurons. During the past few years, research into the neuroprotective potential of NMDA receptor antagonists has evolved. Many of the studies to date have been done in animal models of ischemic stroke. These studies have emphasized the importance of NMDA receptor antagonism during a critical, defined time 3e33713323
