Development of a nucleic acid-based microfluidic device for selectively and sensitively detecting DNA and RNA targets. We have developed a sensitive and selective microfluidic device, which uses the association of Au nanoparticles (NPs) with fluorophores, for simultaneously detecting DNA and RNA targets. Fluorescein, 1,1'-dioctadecyl-3,3',3'-tetramethylindocarbocyanine perchlorate (DiI), and DiI-labeled RNA were loaded in three distinct microchannels, respectively. In the presence of target DNA or RNA, the number of fluorescently labeled targets formed complexes with Au NPs and displayed fluorescence. The limit of detection of the DNA assay (0.01 pM) was approximately one-tenth of that of the conventional duplex DNA hybridization assay and the RNA assay (2 pM) was comparable to the colorimetric real-time RT-PCR assay. The device developed in this study is a useful tool for sensitive, selective, and simultaneous detection of DNA and RNA targets.
