Rationale for combined photodynamic therapy and chemotherapy in the treatment of head and neck squamous cell carcinoma. Treatment of head and neck cancer has evolved with improved understanding of the biology of the disease. Although surgery remains the primary modality for the management of these cancers, the introduction of radiation therapy and most recently, of chemotherapy has prolonged survival. We report our experience with combination photodynamic therapy (PDT) and chemotherapy in the treatment of head and neck squamous cell carcinoma (HNSCC). One hundred and two patients with stage III and IV HNSCC were treated with 1) PDT with Photofrin and argon laser radiation (ALR); 2) ALR alone; 3) chemotherapy alone; or 4) ALR and chemotherapy. One hundred and two patients were treated. The overall median survival for the entire group was 24 months with a 3 year survival of 51%, however, the number of patients at early stage (group I) was much greater than in stages III and IV. Sixty-one patients (60%) with T1 and T2 stage disease were treated with ALR alone, and 39 (38%) received PDT. The 3 year survival was 84% in the PDT group vs. 30% with ALR alone. Twenty-four patients (23%) with T3 and T4 disease were treated with chemotherapy alone and 21 (20%) with ALR and chemotherapy. The 3 year survival was only 19% for the chemotherapy group. Twenty-three patients (23%) with advanced disease received both PDT and chemotherapy. The median survival was 38 months and the 3 year survival was 35%. The combination of ALR and PDT has a significant therapeutic effect and when combined with chemotherapy may be used as an effective therapeutic modality in the treatment of

should be used for the poorest people and are the only real answer to the threat of an epidemic, charity Oxfam has said. A new campaign to fight malaria reveals that there is a large funding gap between the priority medicines for the poorest and the drug with the poorest record for curing the disease. Livestock farming and deforestation, caused by the demand for animal feed in developing countries, are the largest drivers of malaria, which is caused by a mosquito called Anopheles. Malaria is caused when a mosquito carrying the malaria parasite bites a person, and it is treated with anti-malarial drugs called Artemisinin-based Combination Therapies or ACTs. These are highly effective, but only available to treat malaria in the first 24 hours, and ACTs need to be used within the first three days of a malaria infection to be effective. The new campaign warns that unless the fast-acting ACTs are made available in the poorest parts of the world, the risk is that malaria will become endemic there once more. Malaria affects over 200 million people in over 90 countries and is the world's most common infectious killer. Five people die every minute from malaria. The number of people infected is dropping, but continues to outstrip the scale of the response. Oxfam campaigner Susan Page is one of the
