At 4 months, three patients were clinically stable, two were able to walk alone with mild exertion, and three had died. All eight patients were wheelchair bound. The cause of death was infection in seven cases and respiratory arrest in one. The only patient who died underwent an additional major cause of death unrelated to his chronic lung disease: a myocardial infarction. A 3-day milk and infant formula diet was compared with a lactose-free milk formula in 28 preterm infants (mean gestational age: 29.5 weeks). A questionnaire and a 24-hour dietary recall were used to assess adherence to the diets. The diets were well tolerated and there were no significant differences between the groups in the dietary intake of energy, protein, total carbohydrate, lactose or fat. However, the 2-day diet provided infants with a significantly greater intake of zinc (2440 versus 1330 micrograms/day, respectively, P = 0.03) and a lower intake of potassium (247 versus 223 mmol/day, P = 0.03) and vitamin C (370 versus 300 micrograms/day, P = 0.006). The 2-day diet was also associated with a significantly lower intake of calcium (38 versus 50 mg/day, P = 0.01). As a result, infant growth velocity was slower in the milk-fed group (39 versus 32 g/week, P = 0.02). This was attributable to differences in weight gain between infants fed standard milk or lactose-free milk. There were no significant differences in length gains. We conclude that, in a group of preterm infants with a low birth weight, the lactose-free milk formula was well tolerated but led to a poorer weight gain.DIY: How to Combat Dry Cures Luckily for you, we know that the perfect cocktail is one that is the right ratio of alcohol and juices.
