A digital radio receiver can be designed for a single band or several bands. Single band receivers use a single tuner that is configured to receive a single frequency channel that can be tuned from any of several bands. Dual band receivers use two tuners for receiving a pair of frequency channels in two distinct frequency bands. A problem associated with the use of single band and dual band receivers is that the single band tuners and the dual band tuners often occupy a large volume of space on a circuit board.

Atrial natriuretic peptides: key mediators of the effects of salt-induced hypertension. Atrial natriuretic peptides (ANP) are potent regulators of cardiovascular function, and their diuretic effects have led to the development of several therapeutic agents that target the ANP system. ANP have also been suggested to play a role in pathophysiological conditions associated with sodium and fluid retention. Recent evidence has shown that inhibition of the effects of ANP with specific analogues in vivo results in the development of increased blood pressure in rodents. In addition, sodium-dependent hypertension has been described in several models of ANP overproduction and knockout mice. Evidence from in vitro studies suggests that the sodium-retaining effects of ANP, in addition to their other effects, are mediated through the activation of intracellular signalling pathways via a cyclic guanosine monophosphate (cGMP)-dependent mechanism. cGMP-specific phosphodiesterases (PDE) in particular play a role in the inactivation of cGMP, and inhibition of these enzymes has been shown to be the mechanism for the development of salt-dependent hypertension in animal models. In addition, the NO-cGMP pathway has also been implicated in the development of hypertension in these models. This review discusses the role of cGMP and cGMP-PDE inhibitors in the development of hypertension and renal dysfunction, particularly in conditions associated with an activation of the renin-angiotensin system.

After the state party gathered in Austin on Saturday, Secretary of State David Whitley and his staff destroyed all of the materials Democrats held on the governor, according to a member of the group. A lawyer who's seen the governor's office and copies of electronic data Whitley took last year has told Democrats there's a chance the governor broke
