Was in the end of the complex priming procedured, the participants were instructed to press a key with their right index finger if they saw a picture of an animal, regardless of its orientation, and to press a key with their middle finger if they saw a picture of a man. Meanwhile, if a man was shown, they were to press a key with their left index finger, even though the picture was rotated 180 degrees and presented upside down. All primes were presented centrally on the screen, with each prime being embedded within a pair of both male and female faces that were shown upside down. All images consisted of white-on-black faces with both eyes and the mouth closed. The orientation of the image was manipulated such that the man/woman could be either upright or inverted. Prime stimuli were the same as those used in Experiment 3; target pictures were black-and-white photographs of a female or a male face, both smiling. 'So I was doing this lab as well,' the woman says. Her shift, from an English-language lab instructor to a Spaniard, was a 'big change'. She's also different from the students she's teaching.
