The rule of thumb is to 1) Go through several professional-grade apps in turn (remember the analytics; a lot of people ignore them, but they are usually the first to catch potential problems) and 2) Don't settle for a lousy app that barely does its job. Obviously, 1) is easier if you have the money to throw around, but for those that don't, 2) is the way to go. A: If by high traffic, you mean a website that gets lots of visitors, then the answer is: You can't. A website should be low in traffic, high in activity. For example, on average, a download from your website will require only one request from a visitor. A video can require 100 requests. Therefore, if your goal is to keep a website up and running as fast as possible, the answer is no, you can't grow traffic. This is not to say that you can't increase traffic, just that you can't increase the traffic by loading more on one website. To determine the efficacy and tolerability of methotrexate in the treatment of primary Sjögren's syndrome. A retrospective cohort study of our first consecutive cases of primary Sjögren's syndrome who received a diagnosis and were treated with methotrexate in our clinic between January 1, 2001 and December 31, 2011. The data were collected from the charts. The primary endpoint was the freedom from an acute episode of labial or parotid gland swelling (APLS) in patients with primary Sjögren's syndrome. Of the 528 patients initially diagnosed with primary Sjögren's syndrome, 456 met the inclusion criteria and were treated with methotrexate. The mean age was 51.7 years. The mean age at diagnosis of primary Sjögren's syndrome was 43.5 years and 80.3% of the patients had glandular symptoms. Thirty-seven (8.2%) developed APLS; 22 of them were treated with oral corticosteroids. By univariate analysis, steroid use was associated with the development of APLS ($p = 0.001$). Fifty patients treated with methotrexate were followed for a mean of 3.1 years (range, 1-8.8 years). The mean duration of follow-up was 6.2 ± 4.9 years for the patients who did not develop APLS ($p = 0.001$) and 5.1 ± 3.7 years for those who did ($p = 0.401$). By univariate analysis, glandular symptoms at the onset of primary Sjögren's syndrome ($p = 0.001$), a positive test for anti-Ro/La antibodies ($p = 0.007$), the absence of positive levels of anti-SS-A/Ro ($p = 0.019$), a shorter
