Asymmetric dimethylarginine (ADMA) was first isolated by J.L. Vogel in 1977. It is an endogenous inhibitor of nitric oxide synthase and has been shown to be associated with endothelial dysfunction. A close relationship between ADMA and endothelial dysfunction has been well established since the publication of several epidemiological studies. Endothelial dysfunction and arterial stiffness are significantly related, and ADMA has been used as a possible non-invasive marker of arterial stiffness. In the study presented here, the correlation between ADMA and arterial stiffness was investigated in patients with hypertension and healthy controls. We compared ADMA levels in hypertensive patients with those of healthy controls.

Left ventricular mass, left ventricular end-diastolic dimension, aortic diameter and pulse wave velocity were measured by transthoracic echocardiography and arterial stiffness by carotid-femoral pulse wave velocity (cf-PWV) measurements. The ADMA levels in hypertensive patients were significantly higher than those in controls. The cf-PWV values were also significantly higher in hypertensive patients than in the controls. There was a positive correlation between ADMA and cf-PWV values in the hypertensive group ($r = 0.458$, p Structure-activity relationships of biogenic amines at the mouse alpha 3 beta 4 and alpha 7 neuronal 6d1f23a050
